It appears now that instead of 7000 it is proposed to bring 100,000 Russians to British Columbia should the proposals of the advance guard, who were sent to spy out the land, be acceptable to the Canadian authorities.
If all that has been reported in favor of them by H. H. Stevens be true, there might be no objection even to 100,000. Such a number, no doubt, could be accommodated on fertile land in this province.

But in the latest intelligence concerning them we are given clearly to understand that they constitute a distinct sect bound together by ties which differentiate and distinguish them from the rest of the population in Russia and would make them an exclusive and peculiar people in this country. It is seriously to be doubted whether we should allow such an influx of unassimilable foreigners into any part of Canada. No matter how industrious they might be they could not become citizens such as we need, men who will take an intelligent interest in the country's affairs and share in forwarding the progress of the state. It would require generations to break down this exclusiveness and make them Canadians. The authorities would do well to consider all the circumstances of their case most narrowly before giving them the slightest encouragement to come to this country.—Vancouver Sun.
